I found an article citation, does the Wahlstrom Library have full-text access?

Want to see if we have full text access for something found outside of the Wahlstrom Library? Here’s what to do:

1. Access the library from the myUB Portal
2. Click on eJournal Finder

3. Search for the title of the journal in which the article was published

4. Click on the journal title to see what years we have access to. If you do not see the journal title it’s because we either don’t have access, or you misspelled the journal title.

5. If we have the year the article was published in, click on Click for full text.

6. At this point the process differs depending on what database the journal is found in. In most databases, narrow down by first selecting the appropriate year, or the specific volume and issue the article was published in.

The idea is you are selecting the specific issue the desired article appeared in. You will be brought to a list of all the articles in that issue, at which point you will locate and access the full text of your article.
